

Jacob's Revolution

Corascendea, 17.11.2016

Trump's pre-election speeches contained the Truth about the status quo. Unusual for a US presidential candidate and it won him the election. It has also shown that the American people are sick of lies and keen for a change.

America, Western Europe and much of the World are dictated by the bankers who own the majority of the World's assets. They select, groom for the role and present to the public their US and since the EU, also their European presidents. This time the choice for the US appeared divided. One candidate was to continue along the old line. But it is a line that is in a dead-end. The economy is bust, war against Russia does not offer an encouraging outlook and dissatisfaction at home grows to an unprecedented level. The election was a test of the people power. The creation of Trump was the unavoidable response to the changing electorate in a World that is in a crisis and becoming dangerously aware of the social and political Truth. Trump told the people what they, themselves, are saying and what they wanted to hear.

Trump spoke of the power of corporations on account of the people, of the lies in the media and of the persecutions and he said that they, the "establishment" will not stop before "doing anything that is necessary". What he should have said was that the bankers will do anything that is necessary in order to save them-selves. That included making him a president of the US.

The world bankers, of whom the most dominant current figure is Jacob Rothschild, never put themselves into the lime light as far as politics are concerned. It is dirty work done by armies of bureaucrats, supporters and parasites. They are well paid and their job is to take the blame. Collectively, they are called "the establishment". Its real power is close to nil.

Whatever power the establishment has, rests in bureaucracy and bureaucracy is a tumour. It needs to grow in order to survive and it grows into malignancy by becoming excessively complex at which point and in order to continue to be able to preserve it-self, it becomes corrupt and evil in its own right. It becomes a parasite even on those it is meant to serve. The EU is an example of a bureaucratic malignancy. If awareness and dissatisfaction in the masses reach the point of a crisis, as it is currently the case in the US, with a very real threat of a civil war, in that case the establishment must be allowed to fall in order to preserve the bankers and their immediate circles, the so called "elite". This is so in particular when the fact that they are the ones, who hold power, and therefore responsibility, is no longer hidden. Trump came in on the basis that if a social movement starts seriously threatening the "elite", then the only salvation is in the "elite" taking that movement over and leading it. What we see in America and in the election of Trump as president is not a revolution of the people, but a revolution of Jacob Rothschild with the sole aim of self-preservation.

Two great American presidents, Abraham Lincoln and John F Kennedy were murdered, because they wanted to make an end to social injustice and to usury. They wanted to give the people their own debt free money. By giving people their own debt free money and by creating jobs on that basis, Hitler achieved an economic miracle and it took the biggest World War so far to destroy him. Sixty million people were sacrificed in the process.

Is Trump really telling the American people that those same banking corporations have just allowed him to continue where Lincoln and Kennedy were stopped? The American people should be used to being told nonsense and to being betrayed. Nevertheless, the result is good news. It is a step in the right direction, a warm up for what is to come. Trump will not dare to betray outright and if he fails to satisfy at least to a certain level, he will not stay long. The process of change will not be and cannot be stopped and by sticking out Trump as a candidate the “elite” have shown that they know it.

It may be debatable to what extent did Vladimir Putin win the American elections for the American people, but the fact that he has put up a clear sign that if an attack on Russia takes place, the war will not be fought in Russia, has helped. The intrepid and intelligent Russian leader won for himself the admiration and the sympathy of the World.

I do not care what Trump says about women he knew. He spoke on the corrupt and lying press for me and it resonated. (The BBC and most of the UK press lied and demonised me for seeking an investigation into the deaths of two Slovaks who did not get the NHS treatment they needed and into an NHS Gloucestershire language contract that was paid for, but appeared failed in delivery.) When I played that same video with the sound off, I saw but moving lips.

The “anti-Trump” maidans that cropped up the next day after the elections will serve to putting up even tougher restrictions on civil liberties, making it harder to start a civil war, not to say that they are diverting the anger of the people at each other, in effect - at themselves.

America, you did not win, but you won admiration and the World is wishing you success! Your cause is our cause. The West is more united each day, because the struggles that we see concern also the very survival of the Western civilisation.
