The World Cancer Trade Ambassador Chris Geiger is smiling.

A computer programmer 25 years ago, he mixed with millionaires by 2012 , based on his own claim that he had cancer, that was never correctly diagnosed, but who cares, for as long as he advertises for the cancer trade. The business alleges him to be inspiring those, who were left suffering and without a hope – the real cancer patients. He is seeking out, reporting and persecuting by secret methods anyone who dares to suggest that the cancer trade may not be the only and perhaps not even the best way. That is what he does for a living.

What rewards can be expected for such “work“? The computer programmer became the owner of CKG holdings, with in-house publishing of light hearted books on cancer.

Exposed as an impostor in 2014, he sold out and the company went bust in 2017; but the BBC supports him till this day, 04.02.2019.

Such wonderful work deserved any time unlimited holidays on the beaches and under the palm trees of Florida:

Publicly deriding persons of Slavic origin helps:

I just hired an Eastern European cleaner; it took her 15 hours to Hoover our house. Turns out she's a Slovak. #PoorJoke Having hard working Slavic women for a laugh is considered very funny. He has it in for the Slovaks.

Only 15 hours to rid a place of his dirt? Boy, she must have been efficient!

A small group of humanists dedicate their lives and their means to protecting the whole World from cancer. Women in particular dedicate themselves almost entirely to charity:

Boca Raton in Florida has one of the largest cancer centers in South Florida and is accredited as a Comprehensive Cancer Center by the American College of Surgeons. The Lynn Cancer Institute treats more than 3,000 cancer patients each year, and Geiger lived in a villa nearby.

On Twitter Geiger put up this list to show for his neighbourhood; as one can see, the worth of a person is measured in their contribution to humanity:

The foremost interest of such people is to rid the World of cancer, which some of them see as overpopulated more than 6 fold.

4. February, each year, Geiger suggests, people, companies and governments work together on the World cancer ...

And it is the most successful business on Earth.

By 2030 every person to have cancer at some point in their lives.

The Pharmaceutical industry does not create cures, they create CUSTOMERS.

Non-StopHealthy.com

And if everything fails for the customer, sorry, the patient...

Then Geiger's advice is "don't be sadists and cowards", only "rushing your loyal fluffy moggy down to the vet and 'put-it-out-of-its-misery", but do same when it comes to your mother, father, or brother... and lobby the Government for a change in the law.

Geiger's own story is about how he wanted to live at all costs, but when the possible voluntary euthanasia bill came to be discussed in 2015, Geiger set on campaigning for other people's right to kill themselves.
